Older Adult Centers & Air Conditioners

The New York City Department for the Aging (NYC Aging) works with our providers to ensure that Older Adult Centers (OACs) are safe and comfortable environments for older adult clients utilizing those spaces. We also work with our providers to ensure that air conditioners are available in centers and working properly. While many OACs hold leases and would need to work with a landlord should central air conditioning equipment need repair or replacement, NYC Aging works to support their needs where possible.

Listed below are OACs by name with addresses, if the center has an AC, if that AC is functioning (i.e. yes, no, or closed—meaning the Center is not currently open, but still included), and, if it is not functioning, an explanation of why and the amount of time it has not been functioning. NYC Aging centers have functioning air conditioners and may occasionally be temporarily closed if a unit needs repair and it is advisable for the health and safety of clients and staff to relocate to a nearby center while that repair is happening.
