OPENING MESSAGE

We all have a role to play in improving access to mental health services. Despite important advances in efforts to make mental health an integral part of our public health system – from the Affordable Care Act (ACA) moving to expand mental health coverage, ThriveNYC’s offering important awareness raising and capacity building strides forward, to Vital Brooklyn’s path breaking investment of $1.4 billion in Brooklyn’s health care system – as community leaders, advocates, and as conscientious friends and neighbors, we can do still more. More to recognize the social isolation, trauma, and pain that inevitably follow from gaps in the system, more to break down barriers to needed services, and more to improve the wellbeing of our shared communities.

Aided by outreach to clinicians and community leaders, here I lay out additional steps that I believe can contribute to strengthening our mental health ecosystem. Timely care, quality care, culturally competent care – these are just a handful of the important aims that we must continue to press our healthcare system to deliver. The experiences of the communities I represent, Bedford Stuyvesant and Northern Crown Heights, resonate well beyond the boundaries of my district. The insights community groups and clinicians shared with me add value to the larger, city-wide policy discussion and will help guide us to more thoughtful provision and delivery of services across the board.

On December 8th 2018, I hosted a Mental Health Advisory Board meeting in my District Office on the topic of depression. Various professionals from the mental health community came together to present the services they provide to the constituents of District 36 (e.g. Interfaith Hospital, the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene, ThriveNYC), and other representatives, Friendship Benches, came to introduce novel approaches that have shown to be effective. In the audience were community partners and constituents, gathering in an effort to connect, find out more about services available, and share their experiences navigating the web of services.

As the event unfolded, a person in attendance shared her experience seeking help for a longstanding mental health condition and being received and treated in a way she described as undignifying, traumatic, and unnecessary. I aim for this paper to be one step along the path toward ensuring that people seeking assistance will have a wholly different, more positive experience when they reach out for help to improve their mental health – an experience where people are treated with respect and dignity throughout the continuum of care and beyond. With that aim in mind, I seek to foreground approaches that facilitate access to care, optimize oversight and accountability of the people who are at the frontline, and improve police involvement and response.

We must continue to tap into the wealth of expertise offered in our communities. Clinicians, public health professionals, on-the-ground advocates, and community residents can all constructively contribute to this dialogue that takes us from policy to action. Together, I believe we can successfully overcome obstacles to deliver services, improve mental health outcomes; ensure our family, friends, and neighbors receive the care they need.

Yours in partnership,
